Locust Fork Band Plays Afternoon Concert Benefit for Black Warrior Riverkeeper at Bottletree, April 4

The Locust Fork Band will play a charity concert for Black Warrior Riverkeeper at Bottletree Café from 3-6pm on Saturday, April 4th. Named after the Locust Fork of the Black Warrior River, this legendary Alabama rock and country band hopes the event will raise funds and awareness for watershed protection.

Supporting their efforts to protect Birmingham-area drinking water, public health, wildlife habitat, and recreation, Black Warrior Riverkeeper has thrown many successful benefit concerts at Bottletree in recent years. This event offers an added bonus in that it will take place during the day, and therefore children are welcome. The optional admission fee -- a suggested $10 donation Black Warrior Riverkeeper at the door -- will be waived for anyone under age 18!

For the adults, Bottletree's full bar will be open throughout the concert. This eco-friendly cafe and music venue will also be serving food from 3-6, including brunch specials! Bottletree is located at 3719 3rd Avenue South, Birmingham, AL 35222.

###

After 30 years, most bands undergo too many changes and crumble. Not true for Southern favorites The Locust Fork Band. The band plays music ranging from western swing to country and rock-n-roll. They have long been known for their high powered guitar jams. With a legion of fans that date back to the band's early days in Tuscaloosa and an ever-increasing base of new fans, The Locust Fork Band is still going strong.
